Dear Salesloft Finance Team,

When I read that Salesloft's Financial Analyst for R&D would sit between Finance and Engineering, evaluating headcount, infrastructure costs, and the economics behind the product roadmap, it described the exact intersection I have been building toward. I hold a BS in Computer Science with a 3.8 GPA and am currently pursuing an MS in Finance and Investment Management at Sacred Heart University. I want to be the finance partner who understands what engineers are actually building, and I want to do that work at a company applying AI to a real problem.

The experience I am proudest of started with nothing but a problem and a willingness to figure it out. From 2022 to 2025 I taught myself MQL5 and NinjaScript, two specialized programming languages, and used them to design algorithmic trading tools for futures markets. I then built software that generates futures trading strategies, marketed it myself, and sold packages to roughly five clients, producing four-figure revenue. Along the way I took on contract work converting clients' manual trading strategies into automated algorithms, which meant translating how someone thinks about risk and timing into precise, testable logic. Nobody assigned me that project. I set the goal, learned the tools, and shipped something people paid for. That is also why I am not intimidated by Pigment. I have not used it yet, but I have a track record of learning unfamiliar systems quickly and getting them right, and I am genuinely interested in using AI tools like Claude to make analysis faster and more rigorous.

I have also learned how to carry a job from first contact to finished result. I founded Rodriguez Pressure Washing LLC and have run every part of it since 2023, from knocking on more than 1,000 doors to scheduling, buying and maintaining equipment, and keeping customers coming back. During my internship at Edward Jones I validated client records and researched investment strategies for senior management, which showed me what it means to produce work that an advisor has to trust completely. Playing D1 soccer for a team ranked third nationally in the NAIA, and earning the Champions of Character Award, taught me the other half of the job: show up prepared, do your part, and put the team first.

I am hardworking, I learn fast, and I take real pride in finishing things correctly. I would welcome the chance to talk about how I can support Salesloft's Product and Engineering leaders as a finance partner. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Diego Rodriguez
